This was her favorite thing to do, get all of the girls together, load up the dogs and go. It was like a mini vacation for her. She would have done it every weekend. She finished several dogs and had a great reputation in the bulldog world. She was a member of the Bulldog Club of Denver and supported their annual show for several years. Sheila also shared a passion for breeding and showing quarter horses. She and her children showed horses for several years. When Curt and Chris got old enough they moved on with other hobbies but Sheila and Sandy continued on and made several great memories together. They were very successful with their horses and were very proud of their accomplishments. Sheila made a name for herself and her breeding program. She loved everyone but most of all her family.
