“ Rest in peace, dear Bev. Your legacy lives on through all those you helped, inspired, and loved. You and your family welcomed me into your family when I was an out-of-state graduate student, and my memories of our picnics and kite-flying afternoons will always be cherished. Now, you are at home with your Creator and family in heaven. You and Earl and you and Jerry have inspired four wonderful adults and amazing grandchildren. They carry your legacy now. You live on now in your eternal state; it just happens to be different outward packaging. Be at peace. We love you.

“ Our two families have such a long history together. The first time we met was when you started coming to my aerobics class. Yes, that long ago. Then I found you sitting behind a table in the foyer at the church we had just started going attending. From that point on and for many years our families became almost inseparable. Your kids were my kids, my kids were your kids. Our husbands were close friends and prayer partners. Earl mentored John for many years. We spent so many holidays and weekends together that when we didn't people thought it odd. We played together, cried together, sang together, sweated together, and we prayed together. Our girls were best friends and many rather noisy, sleep overs. All of the kids put in plays for us and we loved every single minute of it. But as with all things, things and people change over time. The friendships and ties we once held onto so tightly seem to drift apart. But not the memories...never the memories. Neither does the love between long time friends. You were there for me when I lost my mom last year. Know that if any of your (our) kids needs me, I will be there.. just a phone call away. Because they are still and always will be my kids too. There are no goodbye's my friend, just "until we meet again"....

“ Wow this doesn't feel real. You were such a strong influence in my life when I was a young college student and a young wife. You loved so deeply. Rest in peace and know I will keep up with the kids and watch over them.
