“ Rob will be missed. When I lived with my parents next door to the Burnetts in Westminster, coming home from classes I would stop and talk briefly with Rob. What a great guy, and his friends and family are right, he did always pitch in and want to help others. I remember one summer, my brothers and I were helping my dad with the front porch. When the store dropped off the concrete out front, Rob came up and just started helping us load it in the wheelbarrel to take up the driveway. If he did this for complete strangers, I cannot even fathom what other random acts of kindness he did for strangers, as well as for his family and friends. My condolences go out to all his loved ones out there. What a great guy. I hope to learn from Rob and pay it forward wherever I can.

“ The last 10 days I have been thinking nonstop about Rob. The memories I have of him are pretty strong and happy, even the ones from our grandparents? funerals because we were all together and enjoying each other?s company, despite the sad circumstances that brought us together. In every memory I have of him, Rob is smiling, laughing, joking and always thinking of his family Denny especially and that is how I will always remember him. Though I am filled with guilt and regret for the time and distance apart, and for not contacting Rob in his last month of life though he was facing such an uphill battle, I cannot help but be grateful that I knew him and could call him family. Sandy, Denny, Michelle, and Heather: hold onto each other for strength. Take turns caring for each other. My heart aches for you, your loss, your unimaginable pain. I wish I could be there to share tears and stories with you tomorrow, and I will hold you in my thoughts all day. Love, Joanna

“ It broke my heart to hear the sad news that Rob had to face harsh surgery that he did not survive. Can only imagine the grief to loose him so young. Life has taught me that the heart can simultaneously hold both sorrow and joy. Jesus will enfold you, His little lambs, in his strong arms and the Holy Spirit will brighten the light in your hearts as Rob Roy sees you from the window of our Father's House.
