

Weston Thomas Hornig

November 7, 1983 - December 3, 2025

Weston Thomas Hornig (born November 7, 1983, died December 3, 2025) was my son. He is survived by his father (Charles Evan Hornig) and by myself (Susanna Hornig Priest). His older brother, Andrew, passed away in 2018. Like most brothers, they squabbled from time to time, but underneath it all, they had deep love for one another.

Weston was above all a musician. He was most proud of his associate's degree in audio engineering from Shoreline Community College in Shoreline, Washington, as well as producing and contributing to five published albums. He lamented that the music industry thrived on commercialism rather than artistic excellence and innovation.

One of his friends once told me (as a sort of gentle warning, it seemed) that Weston would be all music all the time. That is true, but he also dabbled in sketching and stand-up comedy, and was writing a novel about a made-up species, the fishcats.

Many of his friends and collaborators have commented on his originality and creativity, and others on his help with their own musical journeys. His family and friends will miss him so deeply it is almost unbearable.

“ My happiest memory of Wes was the Christmas Evan and I drove down to Corvallis for a special event at his and Susanna's home. Wes had gone to a lot of trouble to host a holiday gathering of music, puppetry and comedy for friends in the community. There was great food, good spirits, and much joyful entertainment! Wes recorded the proceedings. It was one of the loveliest holiday experiences I have had. Wes was indeed devoted to music. I admired and respected his high standards! His presence in the world will be greatly missed by all who knew him.
